The United States government has just announced that it will be providing 10 million meals for malnourished children worldwide in 2013. Is this enough to solve the problem? For many experts in the field it's not. "This will help children who are at risk of undernutrition, but it won't cure the problem," said Dr. Jeff Duchin of Food for the Hungry, a U.S.-based charitable relief group. "The lack of food is really where most of the problems occur. I mean, the situation is so dire that if you gave every child in the world enough food, it would only provide a temporary relief," Duchin explained. "The food insecurity exists in countries where the government's ability to provide services is undermined by corruption, violence and the combination of both, and I think that is the reality. That's going to be the largest obstacle, the problem. And this is just a drop in the bucket. It's not going to cure the problem." Famine and chronic hunger have been around since the beginning of history. And they still exist today.

But we are now in the era of a new global hunger that is being fueled by poverty, conflict, and the dramatic growth of populations in some of the most food-scarce parts of the world. Food insecurity now plagues some 155 million people across the globe, and 1 in 5 people go hungry every day. That is more than at any time since World War II. And it is more than at any time since the beginning of records in the late 1800s. New digital tools and research help us to understand what works and what doesn't, and what is needed for all of us to turn our attention to creating a world where hunger no longer exists. Now is the time. The present invention relates to a process for purifying PSA components for process oil by solvent extraction. PSA (polystyrene-acrylonitrile) is a synthetic thermoplastic elastomer resin having high strength and excellent elasticity. Various manufacturing processes for producing PSA resin are known and put to practical use. PSA components are normally prepared by a blending method in which PSA and a styrene and/or acrylonitrile copolymer are blended.

When the PSA component is used in a rubber product, it is generally required that the resin be purified of organic
