Assay and regulation of 17beta-hydroxysteroid dehydrogenase activities in recombinant yeast systems. 17beta-Hydroxysteroid dehydrogenases (17beta-HSDs) are associated with many aspects of steroid biology. This class of enzymes is divided into several groups according to their target substrates. In this article we describe the development of a rapid assay for two physiological 17beta-HSD activities in recombinant yeast systems. The enzyme activities are detectable by their ability to produce either testosterone or 17beta-estradiol as the enzymatic product. The assay is based on the production of these hormonally active metabolites upon incubation of the 17beta-HSD-reconstituted yeast cells with radioactive substrates. The yeast strains were transformed with the cDNAs encoding 17beta-HSDs of various activities. The purified yeasts were incubated with 3H-progesterone and 3H-estrone to obtain high levels of exogenous 3H-17beta-E2 and 3H-17alpha-T. The 3H-17beta-E2 and 3H-17alpha-T of the yeast culture were also analyzed for molecular characteristics as compared with that from human preparations.// Copyright (c) 2012-2017 VideoStitch SAS // Copyright (c) 2018 stitchEm #ifndef FILTERGUI_HPP_ #define FILTERGUI_HPP_ #include "widget.hpp" #include "window.hpp" #include "utilities/icon.hpp" #include "filters/filtersRegistry.hpp" #include namespace VideoStitch { namespace Qml { class QmlFiltersWidget; } / * @brief The class handles a configuration widget for the GUI * * The widget is rendered as a Qml widget within a QML Window. */ class FilterGui : public QWidget { Q_OBJECT public: FilterGui(QWindow *parent, QmlFiltersWidget *qml, const std::string &qmlfileName, unsigned id); virtual ~FilterGui();
