General I came across a survey today asking people what they liked most about America. Among the top answers were: Freedom Independence Every generation starts off missing what they had, then they come to value the things that are new and different Only 60% of people said that freedom mattered to them the most. The top two answers together were only 26% of the total. I've heard a similar story: Google recently began to show me a lot of results for things like "my friend," and suddenly found that one of the top results when searching was "my girlfriend." I know this to be true because I asked people in my office what they thought their friend looked like, and many of them didn't know because they hadn't seen that kind of friend face-to-face. This is because they no longer lived with their friends. This same principle is true of freedom and independence, though
