where no sucker can deliver a blow, there's one guy who can do it any day of the week, but Friday is his lucky day. Eddie Nero, 66, is a World Class physique athlete and will compete in the World bodybuilding contest in January of this year. His hobbies include knife throwing, to be precise, and he is good enough to pick up a knife at a wide angle and cut live palm fronds. Nero's skills at knife throwing are sure to show in the World championship, where bodybuilders will be expected to take down lots of lean muscle to qualify for the finals. The same abilities would serve him well in real-life situations, as he's a very aggressive, proud, and confrontational individual - a man not easily laid back about anything! Nero is originally from Brooklyn, New York, and has lived in these parts since he was a young child. He eventually settled down in the .Short-term administration of all-trans retinoic acid attenuates the development of bleomycin-induced scleroderma: the immunomodulatory and antifibrotic effects. Because scleroderma is characterized by progressive fibrosis and dermal sclerosis, we have studied the effects of all-trans retinoic acid (ATRA) in a bleomycin-induced experimental model of scleroderma. Weanling male Wistar rats were injected s.c. with bleomycin (10 U) and divided into three groups (n = 10). Bleomycin alone was injected into rats in the other three groups (bleomycin). Rats were treated with either ATRA in olive oil (vehicle) or vitamin A (vehicle) once a day for 28 days. Skin specimens were obtained from each animal and then examined histologically for collagen. Serum levels of tumor necrosis factor-alpha (TNF-alpha), interleukin-1 beta (IL-1 beta), and transforming growth factor-beta1 (TGF-beta1) were measured, and RNA was extracted from skins. The TGF-beta1 gene expressions were investigated by reverse transcriptase-polymerase chain reaction. Increased vascular density was accompanied with collagen accumulation in the bleomycin-treated group. All rats in the ATRA group were completely protected from bleomycin-induced skin sclerosis. Skin collagen production was significantly reduced in the ATRA-treated group. mRNA expression of TGF-beta1, as well as TNF-alpha and IL-1 beta levels were significantly lower in the ATRA-treated group than in the control group. This study showed that ATRA had a preventive effect on experimental scleroderma and that the potent antifibrotic activity of ATRA may be related to the suppression of TNF-alpha, IL-1 beta, and TGF-beta1 expression.

Q: undefined function lm in stats package I am trying to fit a simple linear regression model with the lm() command in the stats package in R, but i keep getting the error "Error in lm.fit(x = x, y = y) : 'x' must be numeric". I tried to include the predict() command but now i get the following error message: "Warning message:
