Epidemiological survey of class I and II HLA and TNFalpha polymorphisms in amyotrophic lateral sclerosis in mainland China. Because amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS) is a multifactorial disorder, a variety of genetic factors, including HLA class I and II alleles, are associated with ALS. This study was designed to investigate the correlation of HLA-C and HLA-B polymorphisms with ALS in the mainland of China. In this study, 205 patients with ALS and 276 controls were examined for HLA-C and HLA-B alleles and for the TNFalpha (308)A allele by using a polymerase chain reaction-restriction fragment length polymorphism method. Both HLA-B13 (P = 0.016, OR = 2.08) and HLA-Cw*07 (P = 0.045, OR = 1.7) were associated with a significant

What's new:

Posted on December 15, 2011 This year's Platinum Edition of Hercules Hero Collection sees the three Hercules films of the ancient Greeks finally given a US release, all first time on Blu-ray. While Hercules VII doesn't feature any cameo appearances from the many Olympians and Ancient Gods, it is definitely one of the weakest of the original action-adventures, and an odd choice for this epic release. Also see my original review here. Movies The original Hercules was released in 1997. Directed by Kevin Reynolds, it was a coproduction between New Line and Zodiak, and became the highest grossing American film of 1997. It was filmed in Australia, and when you look at it on Blu-ray you are immediately struck by the differences that Blu-ray makes possible. It looks at first a little rough, because of the grainy DQ film stock which was the best money could buy. But when you see the difference the grainless pristine Blu-ray looks even better. The artsy paper camisole behind Athena's long legs is far more beautiful than it ever looked on screen. The visual effects are also a little rough, much worse than they look on DVD (shot-by-shot comparison is here). There are a few scenes that are downright gruesome, too gory for the current tastes of most of America, and there are some weak editing errors too. Once you watch Hercules on Blu-ray you would never guess that it was made on a home video budget, in fact, there were a few fairly convincing FX shots put in there. Still, the big selling point of the Blu-ray release is the Dragonfly mode which is a new feature to BD. Dragonfly (named after the sword of Ophiuchus) is basically a new film mode which features no synchronisation music, no audio, no titles etc. In fact, it is just a plain and simple movie, starting at 0:00:00 and continuing without interruption until the end at 0:17:47. Sound effects and music cues are eliminated. Once you are watching you can bump the volume up and down, rewind, pause, or slow down without missing a beat. It creates a very authentic experience and it's fascinating to observe the movie at such a different scale. Narratively it almost acts as an almost a director's cut or a lost alternate ending, a new beginning. With Hercules VII the differences don

the API output JSON in this format: { "list": { "item1": [], "item2": [], "item3": [] } } This is my code (simplified for brevity): $link = file_get_contents(""); $json = simplexml_load_string($link); $json = json_decode($json); And then I try to get each value like this: $json->list->item1 But I get the error: Parse error: syntax error, unexpected 'list' (T_LIST), expecting '{' or '$' I would have thought that was the default way to get the json object so it was auto-parsing it for me... could someone tell me what's going wrong? A: Change $json = json_decode($json); to $json = json_decode($link); Don't use simplexml_load_string() A: Try list->item1); ?>
