Esophageal perforation often occurs after trauma. The mortality rate can be as high as 40-60%, even when diagnosed and treated early. Over a period of 8 years, we evaluated the efficacy of various surgical techniques in patients with esophageal perforation that presented to our hospital. Ninety-seven patients with esophageal perforation were treated from 1993 through 2000. Patients ranged in age from 5 months to 75 years (mean, 34.8 years). The diagnostic workup included chest radiography, esophagography, and computed tomography (CT). Open perforation was treated with suturing or primary closure. Subtotal perforation was treated with primary closure, transabdominal repair, or thoracotomy. Esophageal resection was performed in patients with total perforations. We used nissen fundoplication for esophageal perforations with severe inflammation (diffuse type I, II, or III), and the Cox fundoplication for esophageal perforations with mild inflammation (narrow-mouthed type IVa, IVb, or IVc). Esophageal resection was performed in patients with total perforations who had severe mediastinal contamination, and a gastric tube was used in those with mediastinal contamination. A total of 97 patients with esophageal perforation were treated surgically. The mortality rate was 25% (24/97). In the 14 cases with mediastinal contamination, the mortality rate was 6d1f23a050
