1.ization of the thing that it can describe accurately. Combine this with recent discoveries that our feelings, dreams and psychic perceptions are all the result of neurological and mental activity, and it's time to ask: What are we really? Neuroscientists call such thoughts and emotions "the big five". They believe that we view the world and comprehend it through five basic ways of understanding our experience: 1) Emotion. Anger, fear, sadness, joy, and a thousand others 2) Perception. See through eyes and ears 3) Thought. Language creates thought 4)

Imagination. Create images, music, and environments 5) Memory. Learn, recall, and organize information But there's more. Experiments have shown that we are always using all five, using each to interpret and understand the world. We may focus on only one or two aspects of ourselves, but what we call the self is a composite of all the inputs from all the senses and the brain, a mix of everything we experience. From that understanding, many people are thinking now. They are trying to understand the world and the people who live in it. They are trying to increase their understanding of themselves and their options. They are trying to expand their knowledge, accept and benefit from all the information they can get, and apply it to their lives. THE MIND IS WORKING As we continue to think, the brain will continue to support us. The mind will continue to create ideas, concepts, and images, and experience emotions that will define who we are. So look inside. Look into your mind. See what you see. As you think, the world
