The Forever Edition - Chris Brown | Music | The Guardian That Rascal You Know You Ain't A Bad Gurl - Chris Brown Sex has never been an issue for Chris Brown; he's been celebrating it for as long as he's been dancing. The "Get Her Back" R&B crooner has been free to indulge his sexual appetite for the last decade with no ramifications. The $100-million-dollar earner has not had any serious problems besides a few dance accusations but the wrong reasons to leak videos of him engaged in lewd acts with several women. He has been assured that if he shows the world a better side and he is sober, his career won't be adversely affected. He's a young man who just loves to dance and in spite of all the problems he's had, he still hasn't run. "Life is so much easier when you get up in the morning, do a spin class and go do laundry," Chris Brown told People. "I try to take care of my business as fast as possible." A proud dad, the superstar loves showing off his nine-month-old son, who is currently under the care of nanny, and proudly he tells Oprah Winfrey: "By no means am I going to stop dancing. I think one of the reasons the media portrays a very negative side of me is because that's the only part of my career that I'm okay with releasing." The 32-year-old pop star was released from prison last year after he served eight months of a five-year sentence for beating Rihanna during an argument in February 2009. "A lot of artists are extremely offended when people say they should stop dancing," he said. "I have a message for those people: stop being a snob." And at the moment, that means no excessive alcohol consumption, for this baby's dad. "I've been asked how are you going to protect yourself from alcohol when you're shooting videos," he said. "My answer was when I go out I go out."
